

Charlie San Rafael

Proprietor, Charlie's Organics

Junior VP of marketing and communications, Greenetics International

You're so lucky to work for Greenetics. You thought you were happy before, working on your small family farm that your father worked on all his life, and his father before him.

And sure, you had your doubts when those nice men from Project GEMINI came to buy your farm. But they made you such a nice offer that you just couldn't turn them down.

And ever since they gave you a tour of their facilities, you know you made the right choice. You can pinpoint the exact moment when you started to feel this way: it was when they gave you a sample of their radishes. It wasn't a very tasty radish, truth be told, but the moment you swallowed the first bite, you suddenly knew that Greenetics was the way of the future.

How did you know? You weren't sure at the time, but you think you've figured out the answer now: it was a DART-enhanced radish which altered your DNA to turn you into a loyal Greenetics employee! You're so lucky.

Anyway, you're here at the local farmer's market in Las Sillas, using your GEMINI storefront (i.e. the Charlie's Organics brand) to sell DART-enhanced foods from the CARBINE project to the local hipsters. They think they're so superior with their pure, wholesome vegetables and their college radio and their Subarus. But wait until they taste your kale! They'll be voting for Mike Huckabee before you know it!

What You've Got

- A bottle of hand sanitizer – actually, an experimental DNA serum from Greenetics labs. You're not sure what it does, but they were handing them out like hotcakes at the last company retreat.