ALIEN SPECIES

Most alien species are humanoid and many species can interbreed despite evolving on different planets (don't question the space opera!). The Federation's laws grant all sentients, including artificial sentients like artifolk, the same civil rights and legal protections.

The most common species, other than humans, in the Academy are the following:

Artifolk (also known colloquially as "Androids") - Artifolk come in many colors, materials, sizes, and more or less human shapes. Artifolk are produced by other artifolk or by various not-for-profit and for-profit companies. Most artifolk are raised by individual parents or by corporate surrogate parent groups. The Federation enlists and trains many artifolk, especially in its engineering corps. Their resistance to radiation and tolerance for vacuum and low pressure situations are highly useful in diagnosing and repairing problems in the field.

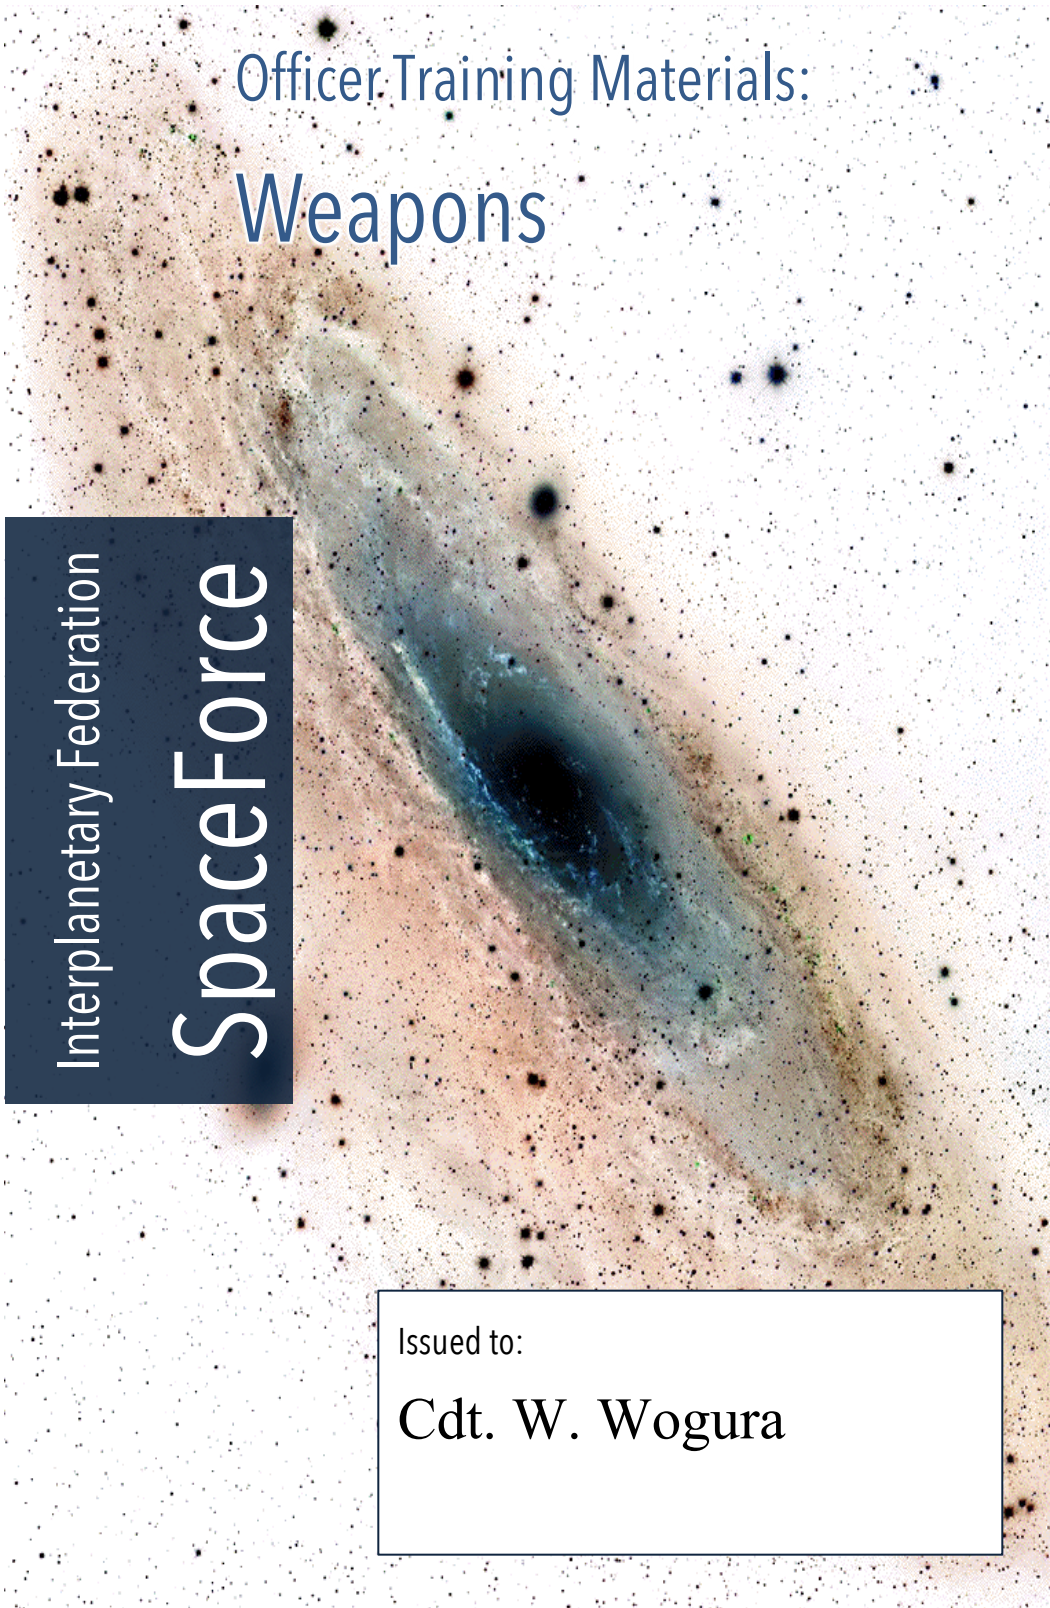

Dwari - The Dwari are a newly contacted species that have recently been granted membership into the Federation. They are humanoid and tend to be slightly shorter than humans. All genders of Dwari pride themselves on their prolific and immaculately groomed facial hair.

GiyGiy (pronounced "Jee Jee" and sometimes abbreviated GG) - While marked by the feathers of their flying ancestors, the GiyGiy long ago adapted to a grounded existence. They retained, however, a skill for 3D spatial orientation that is very helpful in zero-G.

Kina'Kar - The feline Kina'Kar come from a highly scientific and logical culture. Other cadets may have some difficulties communicating with the Kina'Kar at the Academy due to their traditional modes of emotional expression. All cadets are expected to remain respectful and learn to work together regardless of any cultural confusion.

Saurapin (colloquially referred to as "Lizard People") - The Saurapin are best known to humans as the first alien species to contact humanity. They are able to shape shift into more human forms and observed humans for many generations before Earth reached for the stars. While less numerous than humans, Saurapin were one of the founding species and today's young Saurapin cadets are a great asset to the Federation.

Verantir - Most Verantir belong to the Verantian Empire, but several worlds opted to join the Federation during the Bantog Peace Talks and remain loyal citizens to this day. Verantir culture prizes strength, discipline, and physical combat training, so many Verantir cadets will be significantly ahead of their fellows in the martial arts. Verantir tend to be physically stronger than humans and unlike humans do not naturally grow hair on their heads.

Officer Training Materials:

Weapons

Interplanetary Federation SpaceForce

Issued to:

Cdt. W. Wogura

Name: M. Wogura
Species: Verantir
Age: 18
Assigned Team: Blue
Assigned Station: Weapons

About the Cadet:

You were raised on one of the Federation Verantir home worlds and your parents follow traditional Verantir martial traditions. You learned the virtues of strength, focus, and discipline from a young age and are accomplished at hand-to-hand combat. Your great dream was to learn tactics and ship-to-ship combat which your parents couldn't teach you.

The day has finally come! Soon you will be firing on enemy ships (even if they are only training enemies) and proving your prowess by defending the great Federation! You can't wait to get started using the ship's missiles and lasers! It's going to be tactically fascinating and the explosions will be glorious!

Portraying the Character:

You are keen to shoot things! Soon you will be defending the Federation for real and this training is your chance to prove you can destroy the enemies of the Federation with cunning and thoroughness. Also explosions are awesome, take every chance you can to watch explosions!

Costuming: Wear a solid colored blue shirt. The exact shade of blue isn't important.

Verantir look mostly like humans, but with no hair on their heads. You can either put your hair up under a stocking cap, in some pantyhose, or get a full bald cap (or shave your head if you want to go all out). Go with whatever level of costuming you're comfortable with. You're the only Verantir in the game, so whatever you do is right!

About the Other Cadets:

L. Finnegan - The blue team captain, Cadet Finegan is human and their family is full of Federation brass. They seem awfully reluctant to lead to you given that. Maybe they're not cut out to be a captain?

V. Sparks - The blue team communications officer, Cadet Sparks is human and awfully mopey. You expect the cadets on your team to give their all. Maybe they need to be reminded why you're all here?

T. Meyer - The blue team science officer, Cadet Meyer is human and seems appropriately excited about your upcoming training. You approve.

P. Cristatus - The blue team helms-person, Cadet Cristatus is a GiyGiy and you've heard they are a very competent pilot. They seem awfully touchy, but you respect their skill.

A. Yurdabek - The blue team engineer, Cadet Yurdabek is a Dwari (the first you've met in person). You have a hard time understanding their desire to be an engineer, but they are part of your team and if they pull their weight and keep the ship working that's the important thing.

The Yellow Team: You spoke briefly to the yellow team weapons officer, Cadet Ward, and you're concerned about their ability to react with violence in stressful conditions. They seemed awfully timid and soft spoken. This worries you as the two teams' ships are supposed to be backing each other up in the fight to come.

Humanity and the Interplanetary Federation

Many generations ago humanity reached for the stars and discovered that they were far from alone in the universe. Other species of sentient aliens live all around us, but hid their activities from non-star fairing cultures.

Once humanity developed faster than light drives, they began to meet and befriend friendly species and clash with less friendly ones. Human settlement and the associated terraforming technology that humans use to make worlds hospitable grew in leaps and bounds. Soon the human colonies spanned a hundred worlds and were beginning to bump into the territories of other civilizations.

This is when the Interplanetary Federation formed, to bind together the first 125 worlds, many human and some not, for mutual protection and trade. Individual worlds retain their own cultures and administration, but share a single interplanetary force that explores and protects the civilization.

Some species, like the Saurapin and Kina'Kar joined the Interplanetary Federation and traded peacefully with the humans. Individual aliens even immigrated to human worlds and began to form a stable part of human society. Humans developed artifolk and over several hundred years artifolk reached a level of sophistication that lead to them being recognized as persons, with all the legal rights of other species. Artifolk make up about 10% of the population of the human worlds and coexist peacefully with humans and other alien species.

Some species do not get on peacefully with humans. Territory disputes with the Verantir were ongoing and violent for more than two hundred years before a stable border was agreed upon during the Bantog Peace Talks 50 years ago. Some humans are still wary of the Verantir. Currently the peace is holding and ongoing treaty talks are held each year along the border to address grievances and keep the civilizations from returning to open conflict.

The Interplanetary Federation follows Saurapin traditional laws when it comes to contacting young civilizations. When a species develops space flight they're carefully monitored and when they develop faster than light travel they're contacted by Federation Agents and welcomed into the interstellar community. Many young worlds, like those of the GiyGiy and Dwari are offered a place in the Interplanetary Federation and most accept.

There are some species, like the hyper-aggressive Kraliens, who have never honored calls to diplomacy. The Kraliens have conquered several other civilizations, including the Argonians and Torgoth and often force them to participate in their raids. Scientific outposts in the distant corners of the Interplanetary Federation, especially those positioned in remote areas studying strange local phenomenon, often have problems with Kralien incursions and occasionally supply shipments are destroyed. Opportunistic Skaraan pirates are problematic as they often travel near Kralien fleets. There are also many sections of space categorized as Federation territory which are largely unpopulated and have been poorly explored.

This is where the Federation SpaceForce comes in. They keep the peace, monitor young worlds and protect them from the interference of other space fairing species, explore Federation territory, and identify threats to Federation worlds and outposts. The SpaceForce is recruited from all the Interplanetary Federation worlds and trained in the Federation Academy on Earth. About half of Cadets are human (the same as the general population) and the others are various alien species that make up the rest of the Federation worlds.

You are one of these bright young souls who aims to join the ranks of the SpaceForce and make the Federation a better and safer place.
