ALIEN SPECIES

Most alien species are humanoid and many species can interbreed despite evolving on different planets (don't question the space opera!). The Federation's laws grant all sentients, including artificial sentients like artifolk, the same civil rights and legal protections.

The most common species, other than humans, in the Academy are the following:

Artifolk (also known colloquially as "Androids") - Artifolk come in many colors, materials, sizes, and more or less human shapes. Artifolk are produced by other artifolk or by various not-for-profit and for-profit companies. Most artifolk are raised by individual parents or by corporate surrogate parent groups. The Federation enlists and trains many artifolk, especially in its engineering corps. Their resistance to radiation and tolerance for vacuum and low pressure situations are highly useful in diagnosing and repairing problems in the field.

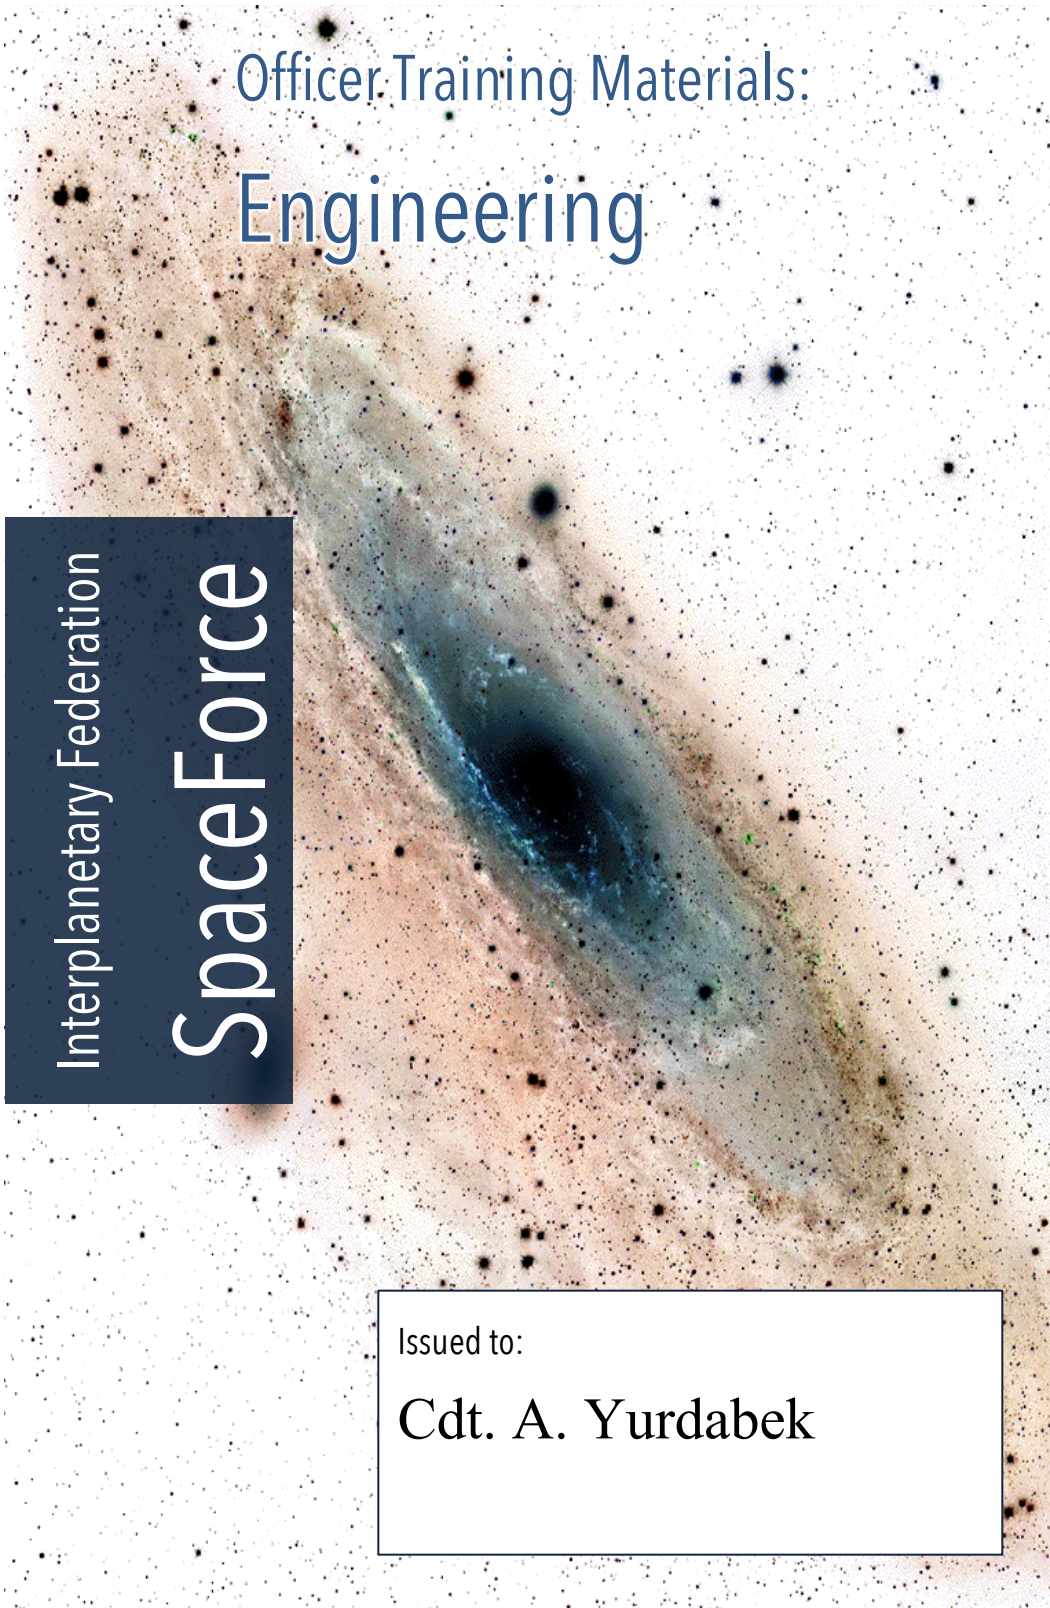

Dwari - The Dwari are a newly contacted species that have recently been granted membership into the Federation. They are humanoid and tend to be slightly shorter than humans. All genders of Dwari pride themselves on their prolific and immaculately groomed facial hair.

GiyGiy (pronounced "Jee Jee" and sometimes abbreviated GG) - While marked by the feathers of their flying ancestors, the GiyGiy long ago adapted to a grounded existence. They retained, however, a skill for 3D spatial orientation that is very helpful in zero-G.

Kina'Kar - The feline Kina'Kar come from a highly scientific and logical culture. Other cadets may have some difficulties communicating with the Kina'Kar at the Academy due to their traditional modes of emotional expression. All cadets are expected to remain respectful and learn to work together regardless of any cultural confusion.

Saurapin (colloquially referred to as "Lizard People") - The Saurapin are best known to humans as the first alien species to contact humanity. They are able to shape shift into more human forms and observed humans for many generations before Earth reached for the stars. While less numerous than humans, Saurapin were one of the founding species and today's young Saurapin cadets are a great asset to the Federation.

Verantir - Most Verantir belong to the Verantian Empire, but several worlds opted to join the Federation during the Bantog Peace Talks and remain loyal citizens to this day. Verantir culture prizes strength, discipline, and physical combat training, so many Verantir cadets will be significantly ahead of their fellows in the martial arts. Verantir tend to be physically stronger than humans and unlike humans do not naturally grow hair on their heads.

Name: A. Yurdabek
Species: Dwari
Age: 20
Assigned Team: Blue
Assigned Station: Engineering

About the Cadet:

You're in the first generation in your family born after Federation contact and your world has only recently been granted membership to the Federation, allowing you the option of attending the Academy. You love machines and fixing things so that's exactly what you want to do: join the academy and learn star-ship engineering.

The thing is, most engineers in the Federation fleet are artifolk and people have been looking at you funny ever since you pushed your way into the engineering track of study. You have the aptitude and the drive to do this, but everyone you run into seems to have an opinion… frankly it's getting a little old. Modern technology has created excellent rad-shields and durable space suits, so there's no longer a reason to employ only artifolk in dangerous engineering environments. All you want is a chance to prove that you can do the things you love.

Portraying the Character:

This simulation of engineering is awfully simplistic, and fails to capture the complexities of managing an engineering team of real people. No worry, you'll just role-play interacting with your damage repair teams. Loudly so the instructors can appreciate how devoted to this you are.

Costuming: Wear a solid colored blue shirt. The exact shade of blue isn't important.

Dwari look mostly like humans, but all genders of Dwari grow facial hair and they tend to braid and ornament it with beads. So wear some sort of beard (obviously fake is fine), as simple or fancy as you're comfortable with. You're the only Dwari in the game, so whatever you do is right!

About the Other Cadets:

L. Finnegan - The blue team captain, Cadet Finegan is human and comes from a family full of Federation brass. Hopefully they will let you do your job with a minimum of interference.

V. Sparks - The blue team communications officer, Cadet Sparks is human and seems awfully depressed. You don't have time to focus on their problems at the moment. Hopefully whatever's going on it won't drag the team down.

T. Meyer - The blue team science officer, Cadet Meyer is human and seems excited to start training. A bit over excited actually… you're not totally comfortable around them.

P. Cristatus - The blue team helms-person, Cadet Cristatus is a GiyGiy and seems good at their job. You'll need to pay attention to what they're doing to make sure you put power into the appropriate things when the ship needs maneuverability.

M. Wogura - The blue team weapons officer, Cadet Wogura is a Verantir and seems a bit trigger happy. They're very focused however and seems competent. Hopefully you can keep up with which weapons they need powered at any given time.

The Yellow Team: You've heard a rumor that the science officer on the yellow team, Cadet Sigrn'tarr (a Kina'Kar), is close friends with their hot-head captain. Hopefully they can keep the yellow captain from doing anything reckless that gets you all "killed."

Humanity and the Interplanetary Federation

Many generations ago humanity reached for the stars and discovered that they were far from alone in the universe. Other species of sentient aliens live all around us, but hid their activities from non-star fairing cultures.

Once humanity developed faster than light drives, they began to meet and befriend friendly species and clash with less friendly ones. Human settlement and the associated terraforming technology that humans use to make worlds hospitable grew in leaps and bounds. Soon the human colonies spanned a hundred worlds and were beginning to bump into the territories of other civilizations.

This is when the Interplanetary Federation formed, to bind together the first 125 worlds, many human and some not, for mutual protection and trade. Individual worlds retain their own cultures and administration, but share a single interplanetary force that explores and protects the civilization.

Some species, like the Saurapin and Kina'Kar joined the Interplanetary Federation and traded peacefully with the humans. Individual aliens even immigrated to human worlds and began to form a stable part of human society. Humans developed artifolk and over several hundred years artifolk reached a level of sophistication that lead to them being recognized as persons, with all the legal rights of other species. Artifolk make up about 10% of the population of the human worlds and coexist peacefully with humans and other alien species.

Some species do not get on peacefully with humans. Territory disputes with the Verantir were ongoing and violent for more than two hundred years before a stable border was agreed upon during the Bantog Peace Talks 50 years ago. Some humans are still wary of the Verantir. Currently the peace is holding and ongoing treaty talks are held each year along the border to address grievances and keep the civilizations from returning to open conflict.

The Interplanetary Federation follows Saurapin traditional laws when it comes to contacting young civilizations. When a species develops space flight they're carefully monitored and when they develop faster than light travel they're contacted by Federation Agents and welcomed into the interstellar community. Many young worlds, like those of the GiyGiy and Dwari are offered a place in the Interplanetary Federation and most accept.

There are some species, like the hyper-aggressive Kraliens, who have never honored calls to diplomacy. The Kraliens have conquered several other civilizations, including the Argonians and Torgoth and often force them to participate in their raids. Scientific outposts in the distant corners of the Interplanetary Federation, especially those positioned in remote areas studying strange local phenomenon, often have problems with Kralien incursions and occasionally supply shipments are destroyed. Opportunistic Skaraan pirates are problematic as they often travel near Kralien fleets. There are also many sections of space categorized as Federation territory which are largely unpopulated and have been poorly explored.

This is where the Federation SpaceForce comes in. They keep the peace, monitor young worlds and protect them from the interference of other space fairing species, explore Federation territory, and identify threats to Federation worlds and outposts. The SpaceForce is recruited from all the Interplanetary Federation worlds and trained in the Federation Academy on Earth. About half of Cadets are human (the same as the general population) and the others are various alien species that make up the rest of the Federation worlds.

You are one of these bright young souls who aims to join the ranks of the SpaceForce and make the Federation a better and safer place.
