Welcome to the Fairchild Home.

This is the home of the Fairchild family. You have all been here before for playdates. Everyone in your whos who have been here before, and are quite used to playing together in the basement.

Your parent(s) dropped you off, and you know you will not be able to contact them until they pick you up in two hours.

You know to take off your shoes as you walk in the door- Ms. Fairchild doesn't allow shoes in the house. You can put your shoes in your "cubbie hole" (OOC space).

You walk into the basement where you see all of your usual friends. The basement is a big, clear space. There aren't toys or much furniture, but there is a lot of space to skip, stretch, chase and spread out. It's the perfect space to play pretend.

As soon as you all were in the basement, you learned that Ms. Fairchild (who usually takes care of you all during playdates) had to go upstairs and rest because she had a headache. Ms. Fairchild told you that Casey was to be your babysitter. You are all used to and comfortable with babysitters being in charge (whether you know them or not). It turns out, you all know Casey.

Today, you've all decided to play the "imaginary friends" game, which you all enjoy. In this game, you all make up imaginary friends, who you all are familiar with (see Playing a Child Bluesheet).

In this game, objects (even imaginary ones) are represented by props. If you want an object/ prop, ask your caretaker to get it for you (however, know that you may be denied).

Your caretaker, in fact, is the ultimate source for all your needs. Go to this person if you are hurt/ or have a problem you cannot solve.

You know that you cannot leave the basement until your parent(s) come pick you up. You know that even if you wanted to, you could not leave the space (enter your own logical, non threatening reason here).

Thank you for playing! Enjoy your playdate!
